Among the occupants of these houses, whose incomes range from ten thousand dollars upward, the love of ease and luxury has greatly increased of late, and with the latter certain social vices have been cultivated, which we will presently describe. The worst of these vices is intemperance, which, since the war, has increased to a fearful amount. One of the exquisite wonders of the seasons the Scientific American, is called the opelet, and is about as large as the German astar, looking indeed very much like one. Imagine a very large double after with ever so many long petnis of a light groce, giosey as suit, and each one tipped with a rose color. These lovely petals do not lie quietly in their places like those of the aster in your garden, but wave about in the water, while the epelets generally cling to a rock. How innocent and lovely it looks on the rocky bell. Who would suspect that it could ent anything grosser than dow or sunshine? But those beautiful waving arms, as you call them, has another ase besides looking pretty. They have to provide for a large open mouth, which is hidden that one can searcesy find it. Well do they perform their daty, have to provide for a large open mouth, which is hidden deep among them, so well hidden that one can searcesy find it.
